Overview

Uniforms are NOT required by STARFLEET, the STARFLEET Marine Corps (SFMC), or STARFLEET Military Assault Command Operations (M.A.C.O.)

The SFMC has its own uniform guidelines. These are found in the current edition of the Marine Force Manual.

The M.A.C.O. has had its own uniform manual, when they were SFSO (just a few months ago.) They're working on re-doing it.

PURPOSE OF UNIFORMS

This will be mentioned several times throughout: uniforms are not required by STARFLEET, nor by the USS Sea Tiger. When participating in some activities (like recruiting or information tables) wear of a uniform is STRONGLY encouraged, as presenting a uniform appearance and a professional image is helpful when encouraging others to join our organization.

This prescribes the authorization for wear, composition, and classification of Star Trek (and shipboard) uniforms. It prescribes the uniforms, insignia, and other accouterments normally authorized, and often provides general information and comments on material and design.

UNIFORM MANUAL

USS Sea Tiger has its very own Uniform Guidebook.

I put this together for my personal use, to help keep me straight. After assembling it, I published it for the use of the crew of Sea Tiger, and anyone else who wants to look at it.

For your own PDF copy, visit the USS Sea Tiger's web site at

When Wear of the Uniform is Recommended or Prohibited

If the uniform is worn, it should be worn correctly. The uniforms described in this guidebook or the equivalent STARFLEET Marine Corps (SFMC) or STARFLEET Military Assault Command Operations (M.A.C.O.) manuals, may be worn at any unit, team, department, division, ship, or fan function at which the uniform would seem appropriate in context.

WHEN WEAR OF THE UNIFORM IS RECOMMENDED OR PROHIBITED

Uniforms are prohibited under the following circumstances:

- In connection with the promotion of any political or commercial interests.
- Except as authorized by competent authority, when participating in public speeches, interviews, picket lines, marches, rallies, or public demonstrations.
- When wearing the uniform would bring discredit upon STARFLEET, The International Star Trek Fan Association, Inc. or any of its component parts.

UNIFORM APPEARANCE AND FIT

Uniforms should be properly fitted, clean, serviceable, and pressed as necessary. A professional image should be projected that leaves no doubt that uniformed personnel are held to a common standard. Buttons, zippers, and other closures should be closed, metallic devices should be kept in proper luster, shoes cleaned and shined, and pant and shirt cuffs should not be excessively long or short. Hair should be properly groomed, facial hair if any should be neat, and makeup, nail polish, and jewelry should be conservative and complementary.

UNIFORM APPEARANCE AND FIT

Props should be cleared with competent authority. Many conventions have guidelines regarding bat'leths, lirpas, ahn-woons, staves, daggers (including D'k Tahgs), swords (including mek'leths), and so forth. Some include prop phasers and even Nerf guns and water pistols in their list of prohibited items. Consider the environment. If you're going to see a movie while in uniform, you should probably leave the prop weapons at home, or at least in the car.

FIREARMS

If you are legally authorized to do so, concealed weapons may be carried concealed ... open carry of firearms is inappropriate in STARFLEET uniform. Yes, even if you are cosplaying from “Spectre of the Gun” or “A Piece of the Action.” (Please note: few Star Trek uniforms are designed for concealed carry.)

Also – note that many locations prohibit even concealed carry! (In Texas, this is indicated by the display of “30.06” signs)

Choosing the Right Uniform

There are several time lines in the Star Trek universe. Some are many fictional years apart, whilst some overlap. Even within the shows, it is often difficult to come up with a simple, logical uniform plan.

At the Sea Tiger's meetings, we encourage the correct wear of any uniform you wish (providing it is appropriate for the weather and the location.) Some events are more formal; some are very informal. The command staff of the ship and the event planners will provide guidance for the proper uniform choice.

Choosing the Right Uniform

In the SFMC, uniforms are designated Class A (dress uniforms), Class B (duty or service uniforms), and Class C (utility uniforms).

STARFLEET M.A.C.O. uses four classes of uniforms: Class A (dress), Class B (duty), Class C (field), and Class D (casual).

This presentation uses similar designations: Dress uniforms are Class A; Duty or Service uniforms are Class B; Field & Utility uniforms are Class C. Class D is a casual, informal outfit.

Choosing the Right Uniform

It is expected that event planners will indicate the highest level of uniform for each event. For example, a Dining-In is a formal dinner, and one would be most appropriately dressed in a Class A uniform. If one doesn't own a Class A, one might attend in a Class B, or may instead opt for a civilian suit with a tie (for men) or an appropriate dress (for women.) If one only owns a Class C or Class D uniform, more formal civilian attire would be the more appropriate choice.

Choosing the Right Uniform

On the other hand, one would be severely out of place playing Laser Tag in a dress uniform. Class C might be the prescribed uniform, with Class B, or Class D, being an acceptable alternative.

Generally speaking, Class B uniforms (also called Duty uniforms, or Service uniforms) will work well for any occasion, if that is the only uniform owned – although, if rough activity in mud or dirt is planned, a club t-shirt or polo might be a wiser choice.

Choosing the Right Uniform

Under no circumstances should uniform appearance override safety considerations. Our members are our most important asset and must be treated with care and respect for their safety and comfort. Special considerations such as sun protection, wind-chill protection, safety, and hydration bear inclusion in the same vein. In other words, your health and safety are more important than your uniform.

Star Trek: Enterprise

CHRONOLOGICALLY, IT'S NUMBER ONE!

Duty Uniforms (Class B)

- The SFMC does not currently have uniforms based off of these; however, STARFLEET M.A.C.O. does. Please refer to the M.A.C.O.'s Uniform Manual for more details.
- COMPOSITION: This Duty Uniform is comprised of the Duty Jumpsuit, the Duty Tunic, and accessories and accoutrements as authorized below.
- Duty Tunic is a black, open collar shirt with buttons going up the centerline, worn beneath the jumpsuit. (Looks like a “Henley” shirt to me)
- Jumpsuit: is a navy blue long-sleeve shoulder-cut jumpsuit, front zipper closure, zipper-closed pockets on chest, hips, & legs. The jumpsuit has trim in departmental color: gold (command, helm);green (science, medical, communications); red (engineering, tactical, security)
- Black boots or dress shoes

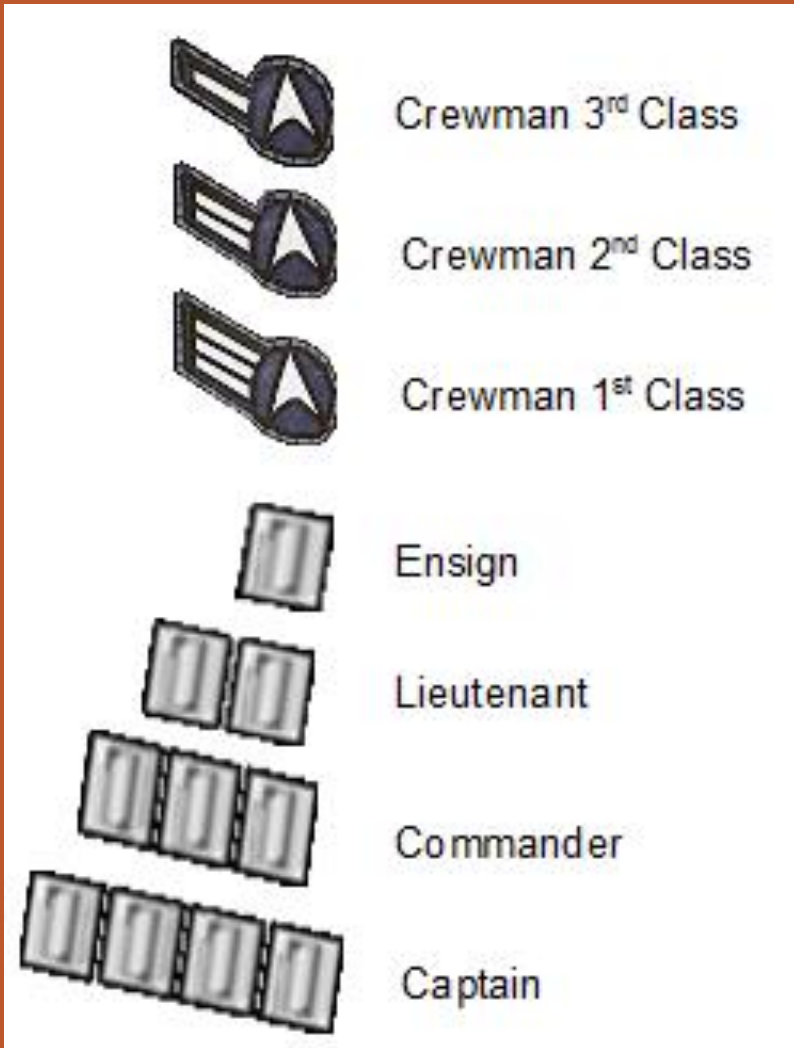

Duty Uniforms

1. Insignia of grade - Worn on the right, horizontally along the inner department shoulder striping, starting from the inside edge. Refer to the chart on this page for correct rank insignia.

Note that there is no official rank insignia for petty officers or chief petty officers. Also, at this time there was no rank of Lieutenant Junior Grade, nor of Lieutenant Commander. Use your best judgement, but I think LT(JG)s and LCDRs should probably both wear LT insignia. There is historical precedent for this in the U.S. Navy and in Britain's Royal Navy, during the Age of Sail.

Note: The rank insignia from this series used to be fairly easy to come by, but in recent years I have not been able to find it for sale in many places. ANOVOS had some when I last checked.

You might consider using TNG style pips, if needed.

2. Assignment Patch - Worn on the left sleeve, just below the division piping. This patch indicates the wearer's home assignment; on the USS Sea Tiger, it is the USS Sea Tiger logo patch.

Flag Officer Duty Uniform

- The SFMC does not currently have uniforms based off of these; however, STARFLEET M.A.C.O. does. Please refer to the M.A.C.O.'s Uniform Manual for more details.
- COMPOSITION: This Duty Uniform is comprised of the uniform jacket, dress trousers, dress shirt, four-in-hand tie, and accessories and accoutrements as outlined below.
- Jacket: This jacket is navy blue in color and has a collar as well as two pockets on the bottom towards the hips. Each shoulder is outlined by two stripes – the inner strip is red, the outer stripe is white. It is very similar to Dickey's unlined Eisenhower jacket!
- White dress shirt, long or short sleeve; the collar is NOT button down.
- Navy blue tie without decoration
- Black dress shoes.
- Note that Rank insignia is worn on both shoulders and on the sleeves!

Flag Officer Rank Insignia

Note: no one wearing Fleet Captain nor Admiral were seen on Star Trek: Enterprise.

These insignia are used by STARFLEET M.A.C.O..
(Five standard square pips for Fleet Captain, and four 'boxed' pips for Admiral)

Star Trek:

The Original Series

“NO BLOODY -A, -B, -C, OR -D!”

Duty Uniform (Class B)

- This Duty Uniform is comprised of the Tunic and the Original Series Trousers, and accessories and accoutrements as authorized below.
- The shirt is the standard uniform shirt seen in episodes of Star Trek (the Original Series). It is gold, blue, or red in color, as appropriate for one's Division. The shirt is worn outside the trousers, not tucked into the waistband. Note: SFMC has a gray tunic of this style, and M.A.C.O. members may wear either a red or a hunter green tunic. A member may wear any color uniform tunic that he finds appropriate for his persona.
- TROUSERS: Original Series Trousers are black in color and a high waist. The trousers have a high, flared hem, and are worn unbloused and over the top of the boot.

Option: normally hemmed black dress trousers, which may be worn bloused over boots, or unbloused over dress shoes.

Option: a kilt, with proper accoutrements (kilt hose with flashes, sporran, etc.) If a kilt is worn, the tunic may be tucked in (Scotty is only seen wearing his kilt with his dress uniform, with the tunic untucked, suggesting that it may not be the most appropriate choice.)

Duty Uniform (Class B)

- BELT: If a belt is worn with this uniform, it is not seen.
- HEADGEAR: No headgear was worn on the show, and none is required with this uniform. M.A.C.O. members may wear the blue beret or blue garrison cap; SFMC members may wear their black SFMC beret. On the USS Sea Tiger, a black garrison cap may be worn. See Appendix C.
- FOOTWEAR: Black boots, no laces, similar to those seen in Star Trek (The Original Series) may be worn with the Duty Uniform, Original Series.

Option: black dress shoes, or polished black combat boots, may be worn.

Worn on both sleeves, using same format as rank worn in Star Trek (The Original Series). Gold Braid for Officers of Lieutenants (Junior Grade) and above, and no rank for Ensigns and Enlisted members. Braid is to begin 2" above the Sleeve cuff. Please consult the rank chart in this manual for exact rank to be worn. Non-metallic Braid may be used as long as it is substantially similar to the braid seen on Star Trek.

SFMC Rank Insignia

A PERSONAL RANT:

- The rank insignia for Vice Admiral and above (and Major General and above) are, in my humble opinion, WRONG!
- (On the DVDs of the show, you never see any rank insignia above that of a Commodore on-screen, so there's no "proof", either way.)
- I believe that all of the standard-sized stripes should be above the wide stripe, like in many modern wet Navies.

- Worn in the usual place on the left chest. This insignia consists of the chapter insignia (NOT chapter patch) if/when one has been developed (similar to the insignia used by the different ships of Starfleet as shown on Star Trek, The Original Series), or the Enterprise insignia (the “Trek Delta” or “Arrowhead”) will be worn.
- The emblem worn should match the color tunic: the Command Star for Gold, the Sciences Circle for Blue, and the “scorpion tail” for Red. Optionally, one may wear the red-cross emblem for Medical.

Chest Badge

Throughout most of the original series, women in Starfleet wore a long sleeve mini-dress in their division color, with dark hose and tall boots. In the two pilots, female uniforms included black pants (just like the male uniforms.) Some females were also seen in early episodes, like “Charlie X” and “The Deadly Years” wearing trousers.

Female Variants

Dress Uniform (Class A)

- The Dress Tunic is the standard dress uniform tunic seen in episodes of Star Trek (the Original Series). It is gold (or a light green), blue, or red in color, as appropriate for one's Division. The tunic is worn outside the trousers, not tucked into the waistband. Note: SFMC has a gray tunic of this style, and M.A.C.O. members may wear either a red or a hunter green tunic. As with the class B Duty Uniform, a member may wear any color uniform tunic he finds appropriate for his persona.

- The tunic has a “Mandarin” collar, and is to be closed with buttons, Velcro or zipper and hidden by a closure cover. The closure and trim varies by rank:

Dress Uniform (Class A)

- Enlisted: the collar and closure cover is topped with 1/8" silver piping.
- Ensign to Lieutenant Commander: the collar and closure cover is topped with 1/8" gold piping.
- Commander and above, the collar and the closure cover is 1" wide and covered with 1" gold braid.
- Captains wear the 1" wide braid on the closure and collar, as well as gold piping in the front shoulder seam.

Flag Officer Dress Uniform (Class A)

- Flag Officers wear the 1" wide braid on the closure and collar, and the front, back, and down-the-arm seams of the tunic also contain 1/8" gold piping.

- Females may wear the standard male dress uniform, adjusted for better fit, as they wish.
- Alternatively, they may wear the Dress Uniform seen here.

Female Variant Dress Uniform (Class A)

Female Variant Dress Uniform (Class A)

This is the standard Class B duty uniform, made of a shinier material, with a longer hem, and gold piping around the collar. In the picture here (from "Court Martial"), the lieutenant standing is wearing the Dress Uniform; the ensign in the chair is wearing a duty uniform. The difference in collar, skirt length, and material is easily seen. Note that with this uniform, no award decorations are worn, and the standard TOS rank insignia, and chest insignia, are worn in the usual way.

A third option is to wear the men's style Dress Tunic, with a long black skirt – at least below the knee -- and appropriate footwear.

Command level officers wear grey. Lower officers & crew wear beige.

The uniforms from this movie are, overall, the least liked. The dull colors, the shoes (built into the pants), the “Perscan Device” (the belt-buckle thing)...

Few, if anyone, seems to like any of the uniforms.

That said, I liked Kirk’s short-sleeved shirt (except for the Perscan), and Sulu’s double-breasted jacket.

I haven’t found any patterns for these uniforms, but I occasionally encounter the uniforms for sale at cosplay sites.

Service Dress Uniform

Composition:

The Service Dress Uniform is comprised of the Standard Long-Sleeve Tunic and the TMP Trousers, and accessories and accoutrements as authorized below.

TUNIC, STANDARD LONG SLEEVE:

The tunic is the standard uniform shirt seen throughout Star Trek: The Motion Picture. Notice that unlike the tunics worn in the original TV show, the sleeves are cut more like a modern shirt or jacket. It is gray, beige, brown, or white. There are two different collars; the standard low, flat collar (shown here – notice the yoke sewn around the collar), and a flared V-neck collar version. Spock wore the flat collar with a high-collar tunic underneath. The shirt is worn outside the trousers, not tucked in. These uniforms came in several different colors – gray, brown, tan/beige, white – and were usually worn with matching trousers.

Service Dress Uniform

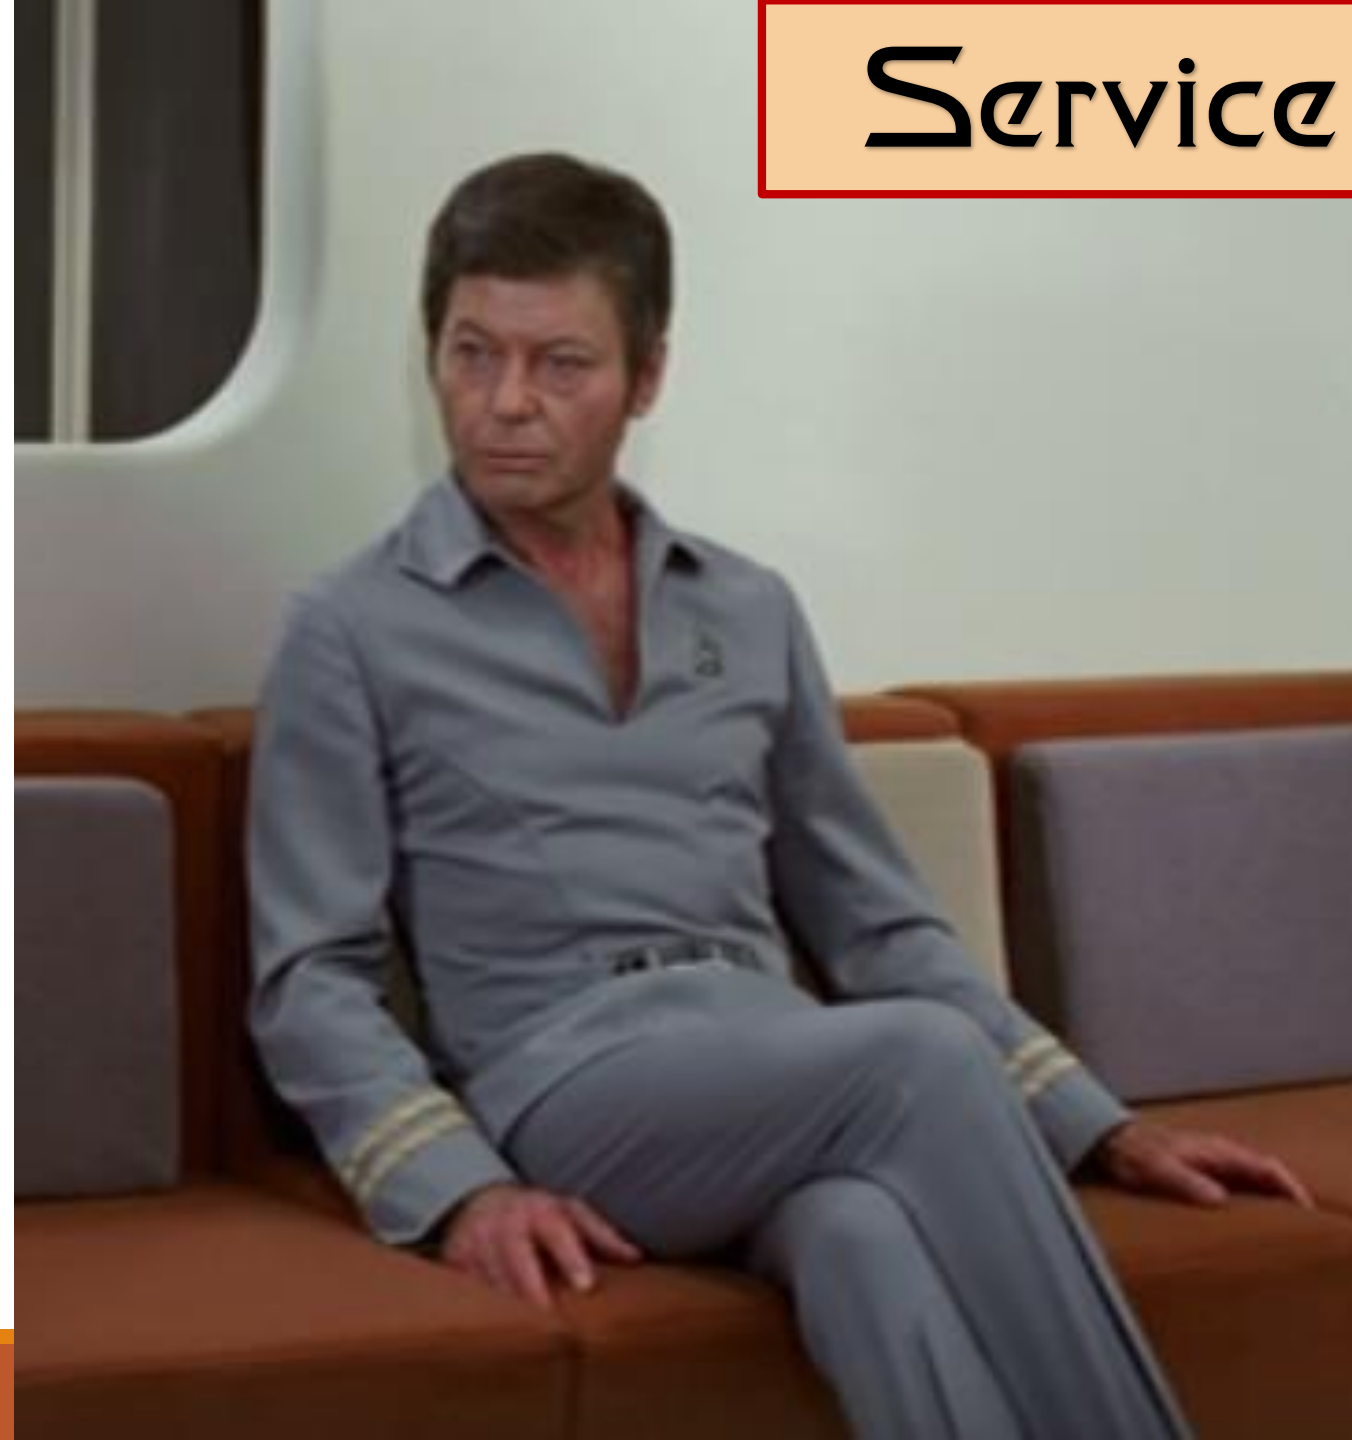

This is the flared V-neck collar version of the Service Dress Uniform tunic.

Notice there is no undershirt worn with this uniform... very 1970s!

TROUSERS

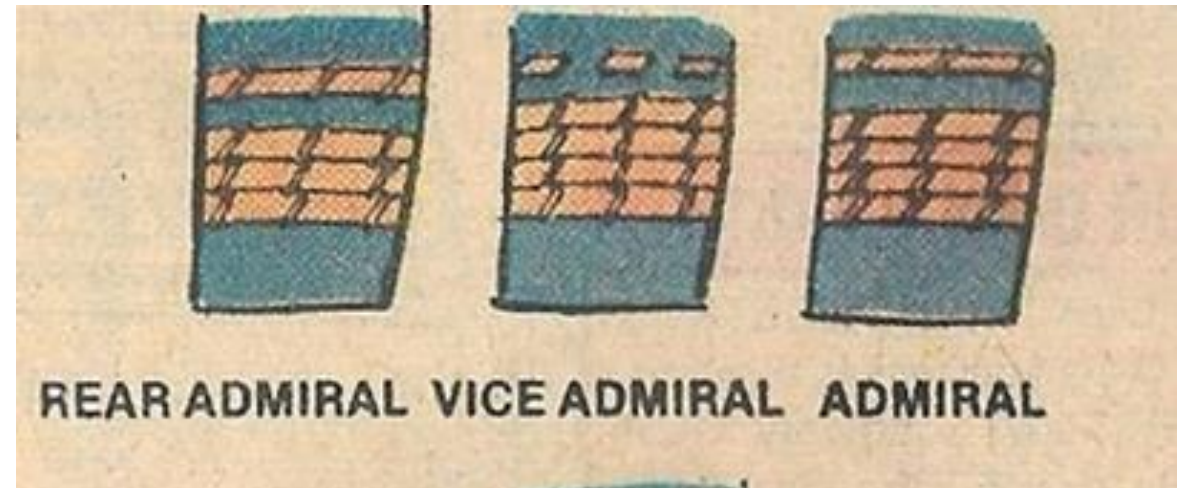

The trousers are narrow-legged, with built-in footwear, and usually match the uniform tunic.

Rank insignia is the standard sleeve insignia, as seen in TOS... except for Flag ranks...

Flag officers wear a two-color tunic, with a high collar, metal chest insignia, and a shoulder tab with an eight-point star, in addition to the sleeve cuff rank insignia.

Service Duty Uniform

Composition:

The Service Duty Uniform is comprised of the Undress Tunic and the TMP Trousers, and accessories and accoutrements as authorized below. The Service Duty Uniform is considered Class-B.

TUNIC, UNDRESS:

The tunic is a standard uniform shirt seen throughout Star Trek: The Motion Picture. It is gray, beige, brown, or white. The sleeves have the same type of cut seen in the original TV show (“Baseball Shirt”/”Pajama”.) There are long-sleeved and short sleeved versions.

Service Duty Uniform

Looking closely at the images, it may be that the sleeves were removable, and held in place by snaps or a zipper hidden at the midpoint of the upper arm. This is only my conjecture, but there is definitely an extra cuff at that point on the long sleeve version.

The collar is low and flat, with an open v-neck. The shirt is worn outside the trousers, not tucked in.

These came in several different colors and were often worn with contrasting trousers.

Notice the smaller-sized Perscan device!

Service Duty Uniform

Notice that there's no undershirt worn.

TMP Trousers:

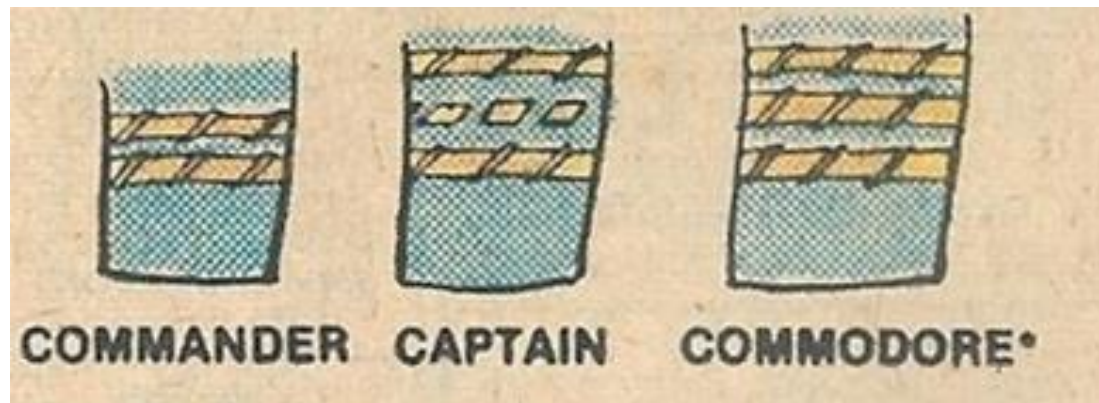

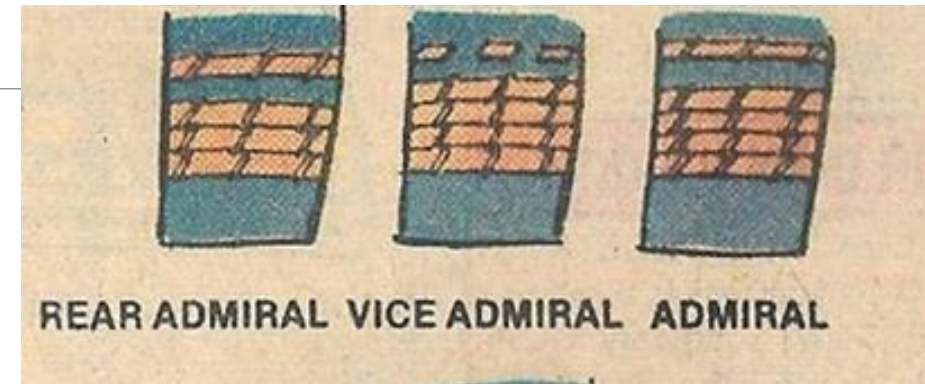

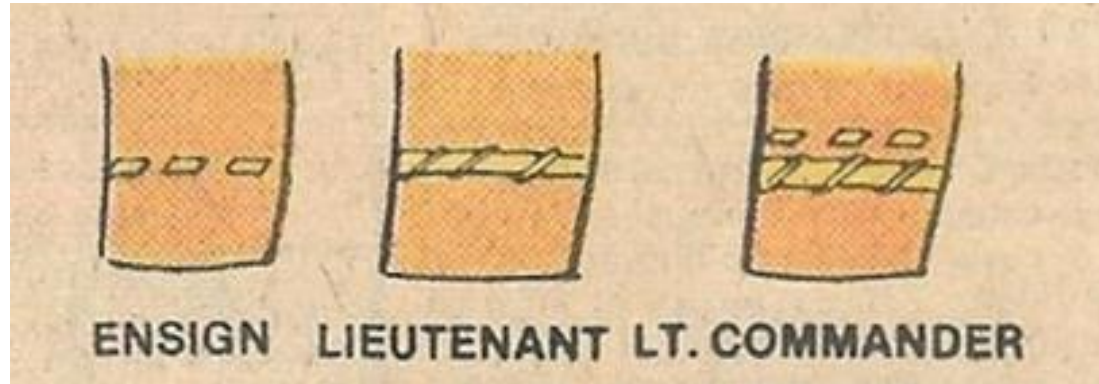

The trousers are narrow-legged, with built-in footwear, and may either exactly match the tunic in color, or may be of a contrasting color. (White shirt with gray, brown, or beige pants, beige shirt with white or brown pants, etc.)

REGARDING THE TROUSERS:

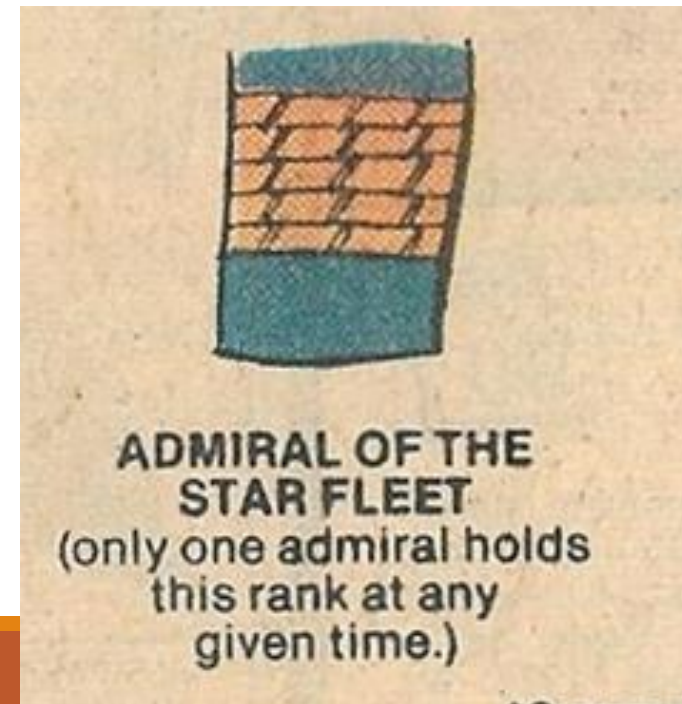

An option would be to wear modern trousers of a matching color, with separate shoes (also of a matching color.) Boots could also be substituted, but again should be of a matching color. To present a taut look, stirrups may be sewn into the trouser cuffs.

Chest Insignia

Note. Neither the SFMC nor the M.A.C.O. have uniforms set in this period. A Marine or a M.A.C.O. may desire to wear the Security gray circle for his persona.

There is certainly a discussion to be had for the adding of more chest badge colors; perhaps Black for Marines, and Royal Blue for members of the M.A.C.O..

Duty Uniform, Informal

OCCASIONS FOR WEAR:

This uniform seems to be an informal uniform. This would not be the uniform worn off the ship by crew on liberty or while on leave, but might be worn while the ship is at port. This would be considered a Class B uniform, of less formality than the Service Duty uniform.

On duty, when appropriate.

On other appropriate occasions (conventions, summits, etc.), as desired.

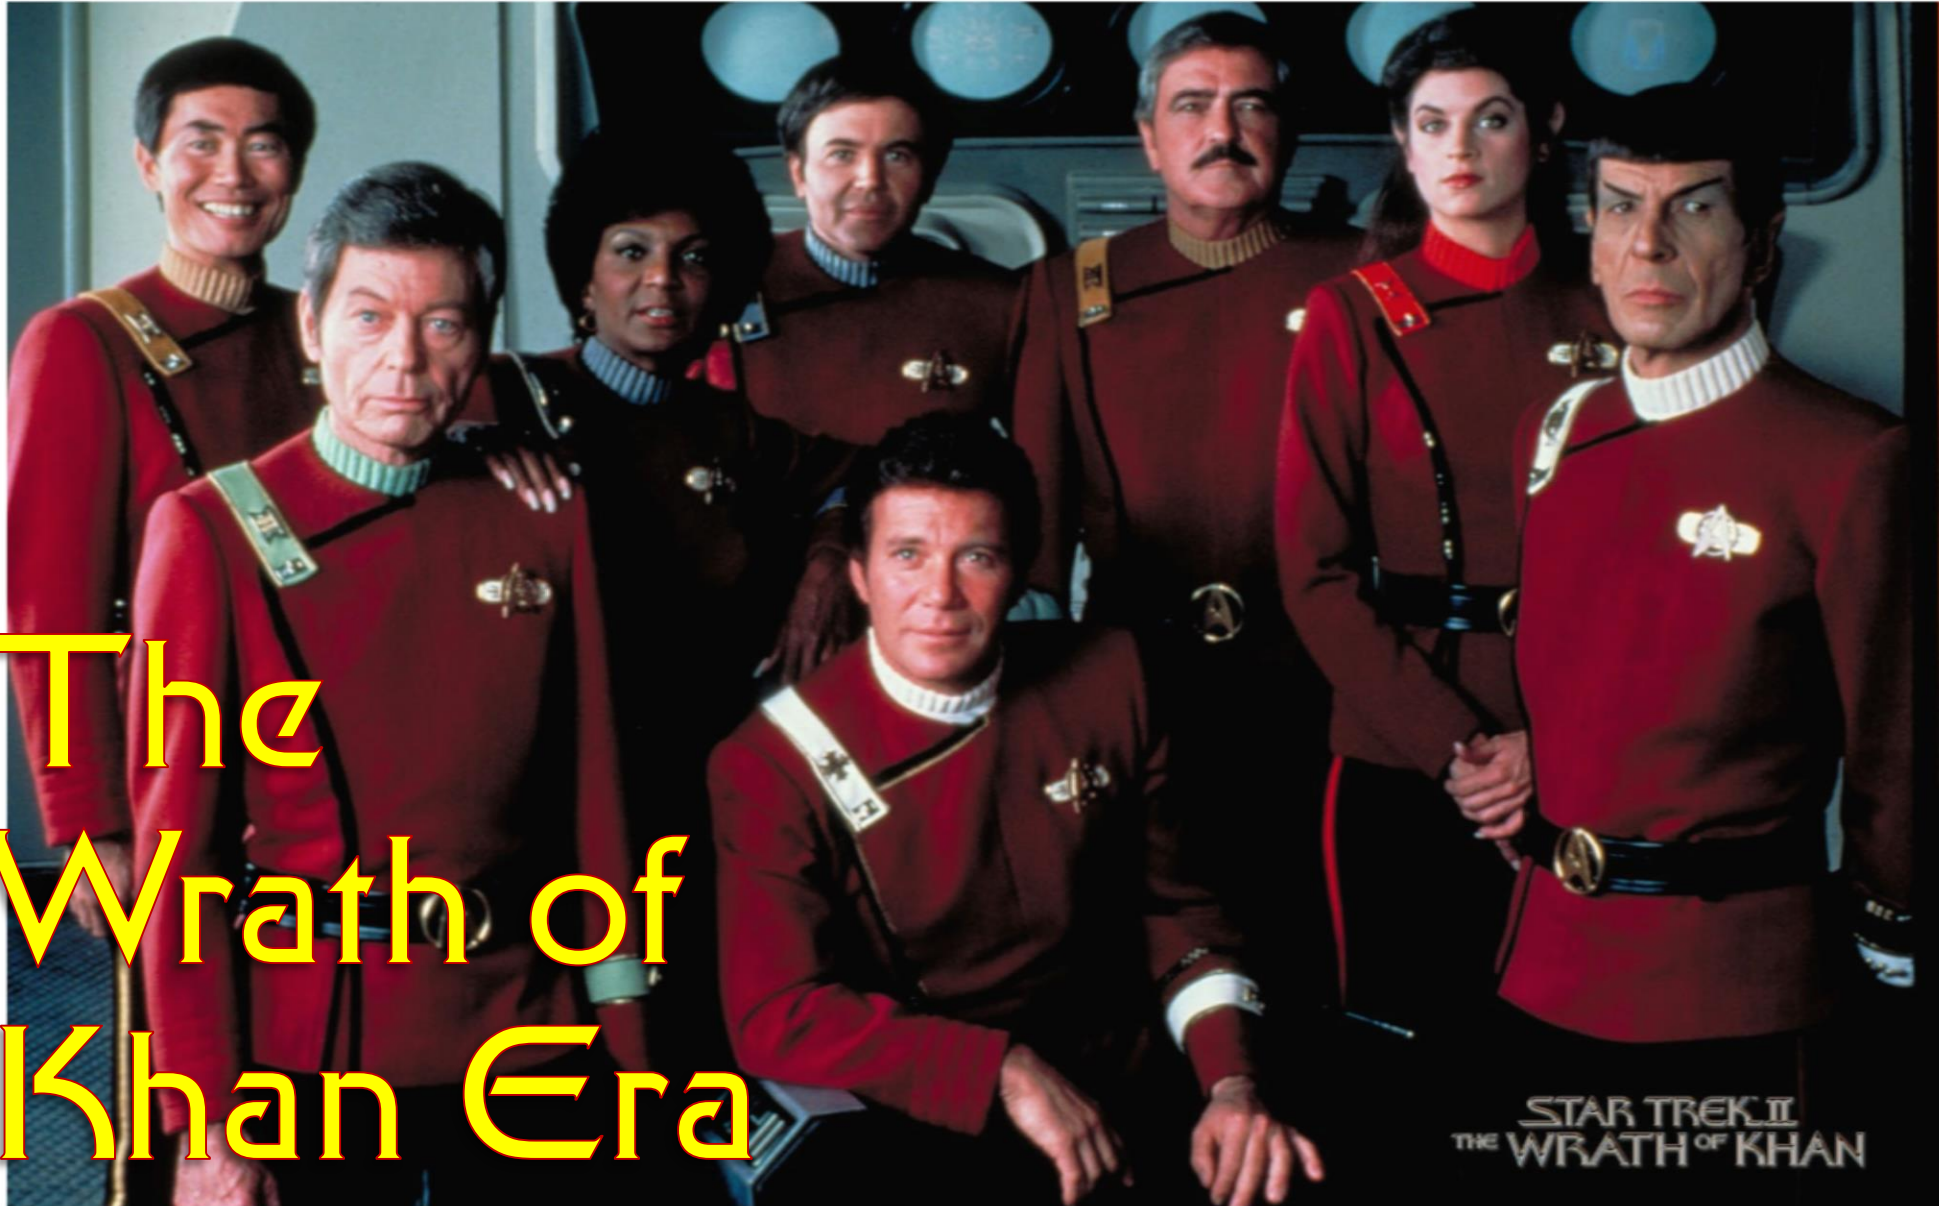

Duty Uniform, Informal

The jacket is a double-breasted sport coat, without lapels or exterior pockets. It is worn closed; the closure is Velcro (or snaps), and is worn with the normal Chest Insignia placed over the closure. The jacket has shoulder tabs indicating rank, as on the Service Duty and the Utility Uniforms. In the movie and in publicity materials for the movie, it is only either gray or beige – versions in brown or white are conjectural only, but logical.

(Notice that the comic-book illustration erroneously shows this jacket to be single-breasted.)

The Wrath of Khan Era

STAR TREK II
THE WRATH OF KHAN

Service Dress Uniform

This style uniform, along with its variations, was the longest-lasting in Star Trek Canon, running from the movie Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan all the way to just prior to Star Trek: The Next Generation. Episodes of TNG show Starfleet members (including Ensign Picard and the crew of the Enterprise-C) wearing a variant of this uniform.

When worn with award ribbons, this uniform is a Class-A dress uniform. Without the award ribbons, this uniform is Class B.

In the movies, enlisted members wore a different uniform. For our purposes, enlisted members may wear either this uniform (with proper insignia) or the enlisted uniform seen on screen and detailed elsewhere in the USS Sea Tiger Uniform Manual.

Service Dress Uniform

The jacket, sometimes referred to as the “Monster Maroon” because of its difficult construction, as seen in Star Trek II: The Wrath of Khan and subsequent movies starring the original series cast. It is made of a heavy weight wool elastique, cavalry twill, wool gabardine, or polyester gabardine, in maroon or burgundy. From time to time, the color is also called “cranberry.” It is a uniquely constructed double-breasted jacket, with a strap over the right shoulder and on the left sleeve cuff of the department color (matching the tunic).

A “Security Device” is worn on the back right shoulder, at the end of the shoulder strap. (It looks like a button. Several different styles were used through the movies.)

The front flap of the jacket should have a 3/8-inch black strip on the opening end and a turn lock device on the shoulder strap/flap closure.

Service Dress Uniform

For flag officers, the front flap of the jacket would have a 3/16-inch gold strip alongside the back stripe edging.

On the uniforms in the movies, a chain was worn sewn along the edge of the inner “flap.” This is very difficult to acquire, and many professionally made uniforms of this type do not allow the flap to be worn open. It is optional to have this chain. For Captains and above, the inside flap color is white; for Commanders and below, the inner flap is tan.

Service Dress Uniform

The tunic is a long sleeved turtleneck, with ribbed collar and cuffs, in the departmental color.

- Command officers wear a white tunic.
- Science, Navigation, and Communications officers wear a blueish gray tunic.
- Medical officers wear a mint green tunic.
- Engineering and Helm officers wear a yellow ochre tunic.
- Security officers wear a hunter green tunic.
- Cadets wear a red tunic.
- Enlisted personnel wear a black tunic, but their shoulder strap and left sleeve departmental stripe should be in their departmental color. For example, an enlisted engineer would wear a black tunic with a yellow ochre shoulder strap and sleeve strap.

Service Dress Uniform

Trousers:

Canonically, these are black trousers, with a flared cuff between the knee and the ankle (at the top of the boot.) There is a stripe running down the sides of the trousers; the color depends on the department.

- Command officers wear a maroon/burgundy/cranberry stripe, of the same color as the uniform jacket.
- Science and Navigation officers wear a gray stripe.
- Communications officers wear a very pale blue stripe.
- Medical officers wear mint green stripe.
- Engineering and Helm officers wear a yellow ochre stripe.
- Security officers wear a hunter green stripe.
- Cadets wear a red stripe.

“Pips and Squeaks”

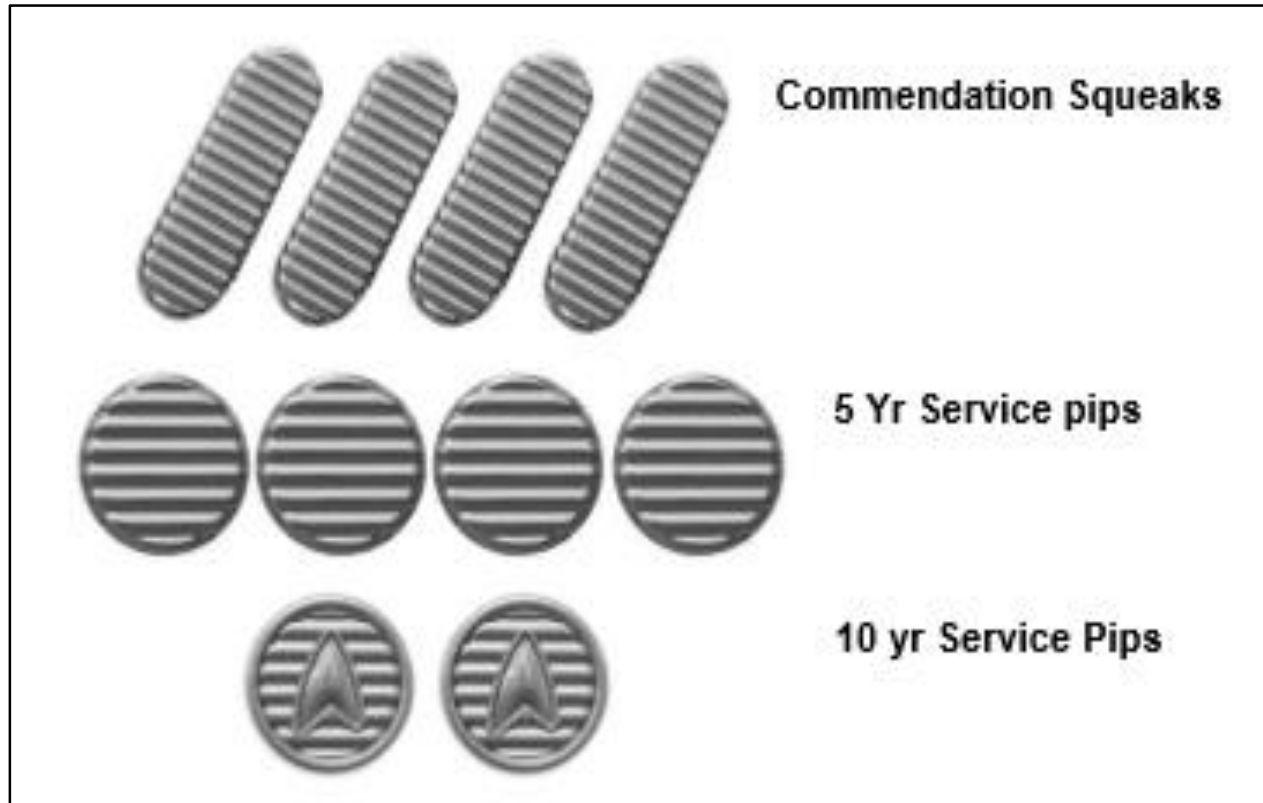

There's a lot of disagreement on Pips and Squeaks... I choose to use what the M.A.C.O. put in their uniform manual.

Pips & Squeaks— these are round (pip) or long oval (squeak) devices, worn on the left sleeve departmental stripe, to indicate years of service and commendations. Enlisted wear silver pips and squeaks; Officers wear gold.

A pip indicates five years of service. It is a flat circle with grooves running through it.

“Pips and Squeaks”

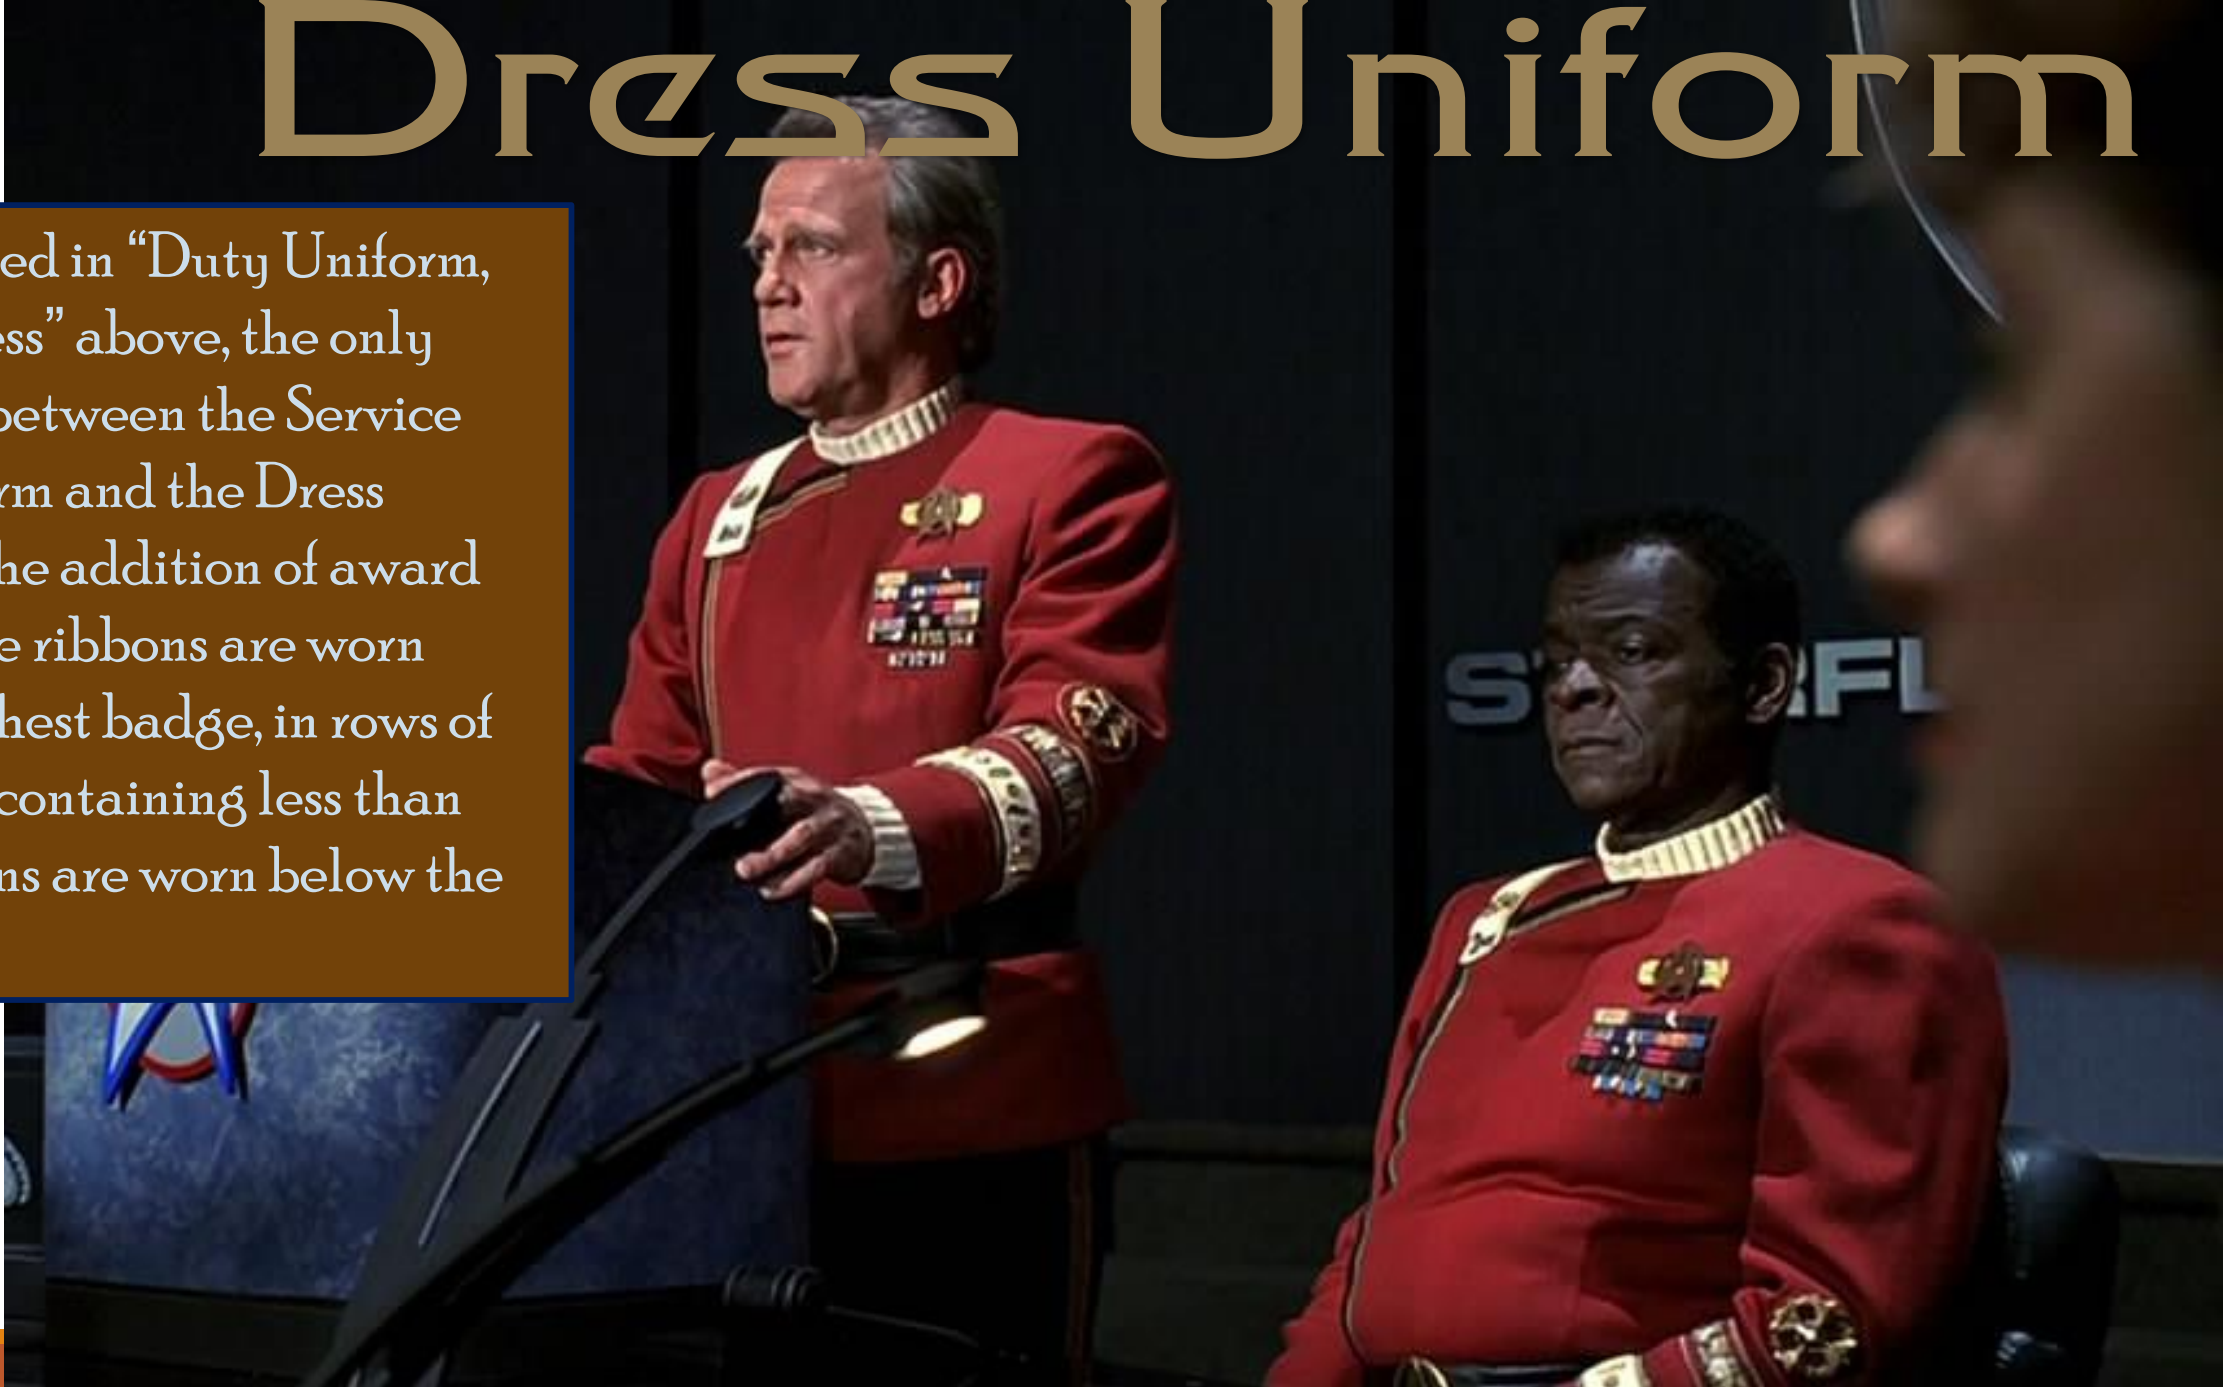

A ten-year pip indicates ten years of service. It is the same size and shape as the standard five-year pip, but has a Trek Delta embossed on it over the grooves.

A squeak is an elongated oval (or rounded rectangle), and is used to designate a wearer who has received a STARFLEET commendation.

Dress Uniform

As mentioned in “Duty Uniform, Service Dress” above, the only difference between the Service Dress uniform and the Dress uniform is the addition of award ribbons. The ribbons are worn under the chest badge, in rows of three; rows containing less than three ribbons are worn below the full rows.

Variations on the WOK

STAR TREK: THE NEXT GENERATION

1st & 2nd Season

Duty Uniform Jumpsuit

Uniforms 2350's-2365

COMMAND UNIFORM
The red duty uniform denoted the command division, and was worn by crew members such as Captain Picard and Commander Riker. This was an all-in-one suit with full length pants and long sleeves. The design was worn by both male and female officers.

SECURITY/ OPERATIONS
Crew members who belonged to the departments of engineering operations or security, such as Lieutenant Yar, wore gold duty uniforms. The all-in-one version was mostly black, with gold coloring on the sleeves and torso. The Starfleet insignia was worn on the left of the chest.

MEDICAL/ SCIENCE
A blue shirt indicated a crew member from the medical or science divisions. It was also worn by personnel who performed social functions, such as the ship's counselor or schoolteacher. As with the other standard duty uniforms, it was worn with black boots.

The duty uniforms of this period consisted of one piece jumpsuits that were worn by both male and female officers.

A crew member's rank was denoted by what appeared to be a small gold insignia between the collar and the chest on the uniform.

Medical and science personnel wore blue, as they had during Spock and Dr. McCoy's era in the 2300's.

This is a form-fitting one-piece jumpsuit, with a front zipper closure. Pockets for tricorders and holsters for phasers were attached when on away missions; otherwise, no pockets are visible on the uniform. The neck is low, and lies flat. There is a yoke with piping of the division color worn on the top black shoulders, and the trouser cuffs are v-shaped and likewise trimmed.

The three colors worn are:

- Red: Command (including Flight Control)
- Blue: Science & Medical
- Yellow: Operations (including Engineering and Security)

3rd thru & 7th Season

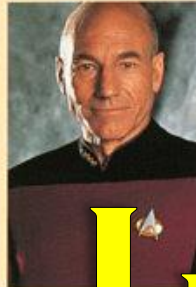

Duty Uniform

Uniforms 2366-73

COMMAND UNIFORM

This version of the command uniform differed from its predecessor in that it had a stand-up collar on which the rank pips were displayed. The colored braiding that had been on the black shoulders was removed. It was worn by both male and female officers.

Unlike the previous all-in-one jumpsuit, this was a two-piece uniform with separate pants.

SECURITY/ ENGINEERING

As with the other duty uniforms, the security and engineering gold-colored suit was essentially the same as its predecessor, except for the stand-up collar and the removal of the gold piping on the black shoulders. The Starfleet insignia kept its place on the left of the chest.

The updated version of the uniform kept the vent at the front of the pants.

Uniform 2366-73

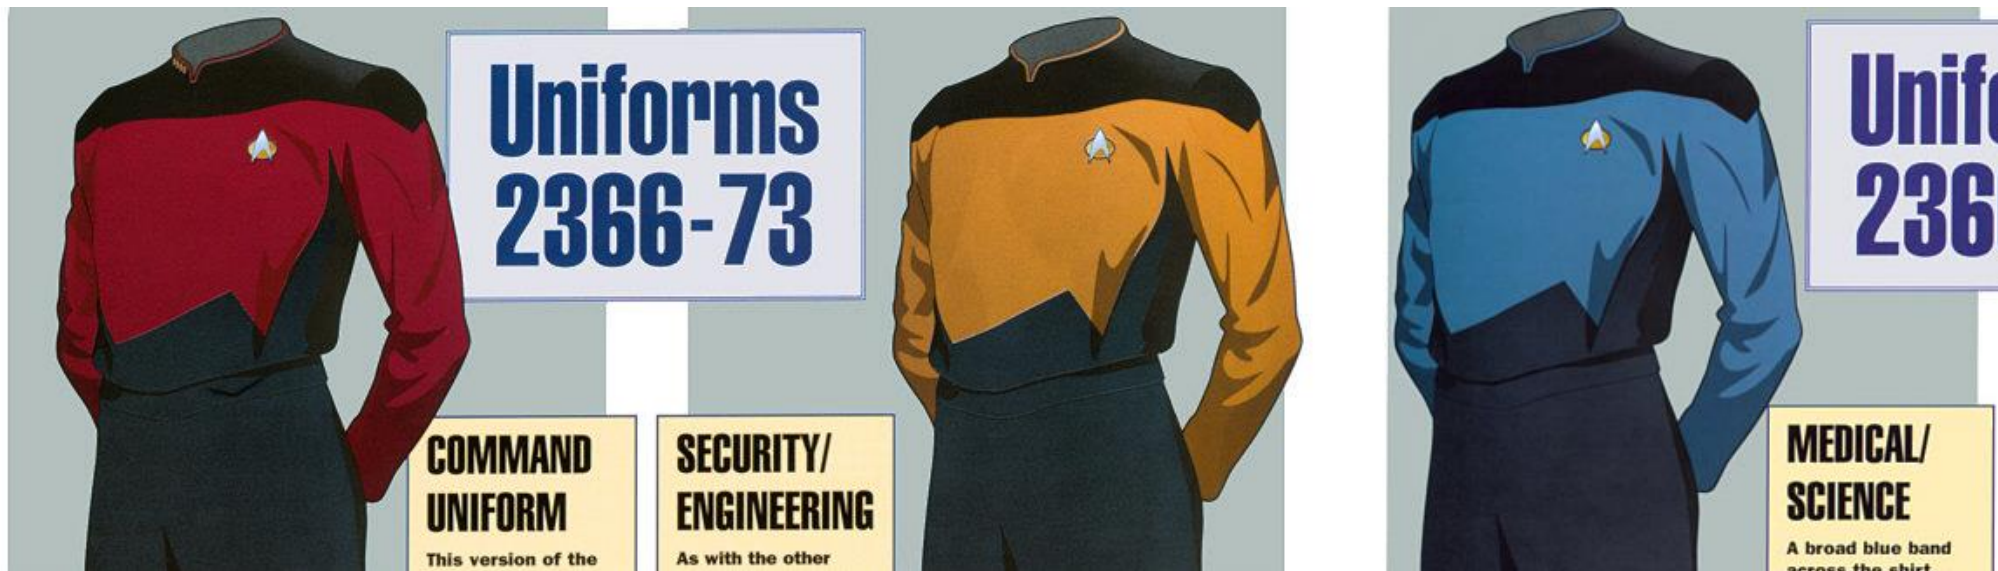

MEDICAL/ SCIENCE

A broad blue band across the shirt continued to signify a crew member from the medical or science departments. This version was a two-piece uniform, unlike the earlier all-in-one jumpsuit, but it did retain the uneven, black stripe across the lower stomach area.

The higher collar on this version of the duty uniform allowed the officer's rank to be displayed more clearly.

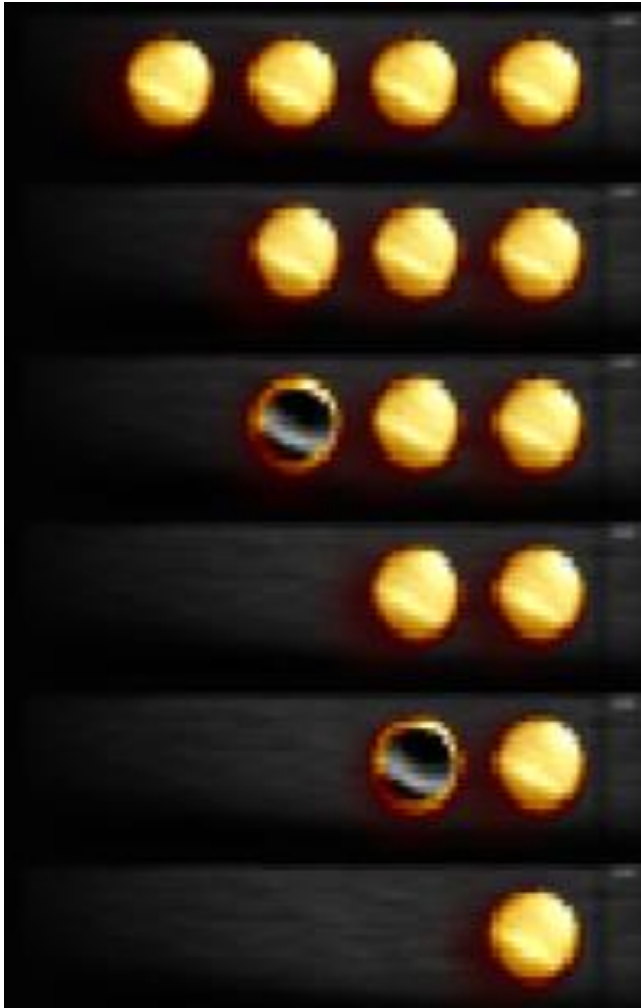

The jumpsuit uniform proved uncomfortable for many, and was replaced in 2366 by a two-piece uniform. This uniform retained the coloration of the previous one, increased the height of the collar, removed the piping on the yoke and on the trousers, and generally made for a more comfortable, and better-looking, uniform.

The SFMC has a version of this uniform; it is gray as the departmental color, uses the SFMC-standard trousers-with-bloodstripe, and has the SFMC insignia on the left collar. Type A Branch devices may be worn above the combadge.

The M.A.C.O. also use this uniform; it is either mustard gold or royal blue as the department color, and follows the normal insignia placement.

Uniform Insignia

Throughout ST:TNG, no insignia was seen for enlisted personnel. “Chief” O’Brien wore Lieutenant rank pips when he was the Transporter Chief onboard Enterprise-D

Flag Officer Duty Uniform

Uniforms 2266-73

ADMIRAL'S UNIFORM

The previous incarnation of the admiral's uniform featured a diagonal sash across the tunic, but this version's tunic had a deep 'V' at the neck and gold stripes on the cuffs. It was worn with a black undershirt that had a gold-lined, stand-up collar.

As with the previous incarnation of the admiral's uniform, this version could be worn by both male and female flag officers.

ADMIRAL'S VARIANT

This style of admiral's uniform shared much in common with the duty uniforms of this period in that it had black shoulders and a stand-up collar on which rank pips were displayed. The tunic of this version fastened in the center, and it was worn with black pants.

Gold braiding ran down the center of the jacket. Rank stripes were displayed on the cuffs.

Flag Officer (Type D)

2266

The pullover tunic on this uniform was separate from the trousers. It featured black shoulders, a high, upstanding collar, and a deep “V” at the neck. The shoulders, and the “V”, are lined with a gold piping, and four rows of similar piping is on the sleeves. The body of the tunic is Command Red. Rank is worn on both collars and on both sleeves (over the piping).

Flag Officer (Type E)

The tunic on this uniform was separate from the trousers. It featured black shoulders, a high, upstanding collar, and a center front closure. The front closure is trimmed in 1/8" gold piping. Each sleeve has a black band, trimmed with similar gold piping. The body of the tunic is Command Red. Rank is worn on both collars and on both sleeves (over the black cuff).

Combadge style is dependent on your timeframe.

Flag rank is worn on both collars and on both sleeve cuffs.

Fleet Captains are “flag” rank... but can get away with the standard duty uniforms.

DRESS UNIFORM

As with the duty suit, the dress uniform also came in departmental colors with blue again representing the medical and science divisions. These more formal outfits were normally reserved for occasions such as ceremonies and diplomatic functions.

The Starfleet communicator badge was worn on the left-hand side of the dress uniform jacket.

DRESS UNIFORM

A gold-colored dress uniform continued to signify someone from the security or engineering departments. As with the other dress uniforms, it was worn with the familiar black pants and black boots that were worn with the standard duty uniform.

Rank insignia was displayed on the right shoulder of the dress uniform.

Dress uniform

Throughout the seven seasons of Star Trek: The Next Generation, there were a couple of variations of the Dress Uniform. The only significant difference was in the length of the uniform. Earlier versions fell to below the knee, while later uniforms fell just above the knee. Length aside, these uniforms were the same – and remained the same through Voyager and the first five seasons of Deep Space Nine. It was worn by both male and female personnel, and by enlisted through flag officers (with some minor differences.) It is considered to be a Class A (Dress) uniform.

Dress uniform

Notice that there are no decorations (ribbons, medals, etc) worn on-screen with this uniform. Note also that the SFMC does not have an official version of this, but it would be pretty easy to get one made – merely replace the division color with charcoal gray. M.A.C.O. does use this as a dress uniform option; they wear ribbons underneath and centered on the combadge.

Rank insignia is worn on the right shoulder. I don't recall seeing flag officers wearing this, but I think this would be the one time they would wear only one set of insignia

COMMAND VARIANT

This variant of the command uniform was gradually introduced in the late 2360's. It was almost completely black except for the red stripe across the shoulders, and was worn with a purple-gray undershirt that emerged from the open collar of the tunic.

SECURITY VARIANT

Gold was again used to denote engineering and security personnel. The tunic of this uniform variant featured a seam down the center which could be opened along its length, allowing the wearer to vary the length of the collar or even to allow the tunic to hang open.

This type of uniform came in an all-in-one or two-piece format. It was worn with separate pants.

MEDICAL VARIANT

Members of the medical and science departments could also choose this uniform variant with a blue band across the shoulders. As with the other uniforms, the regulation issue communicator badge was worn on the left side of the chest just below the departmental stripe.

The collar of this uniform was designed to provide a more flexible and comfortable alternative.

variant uniform

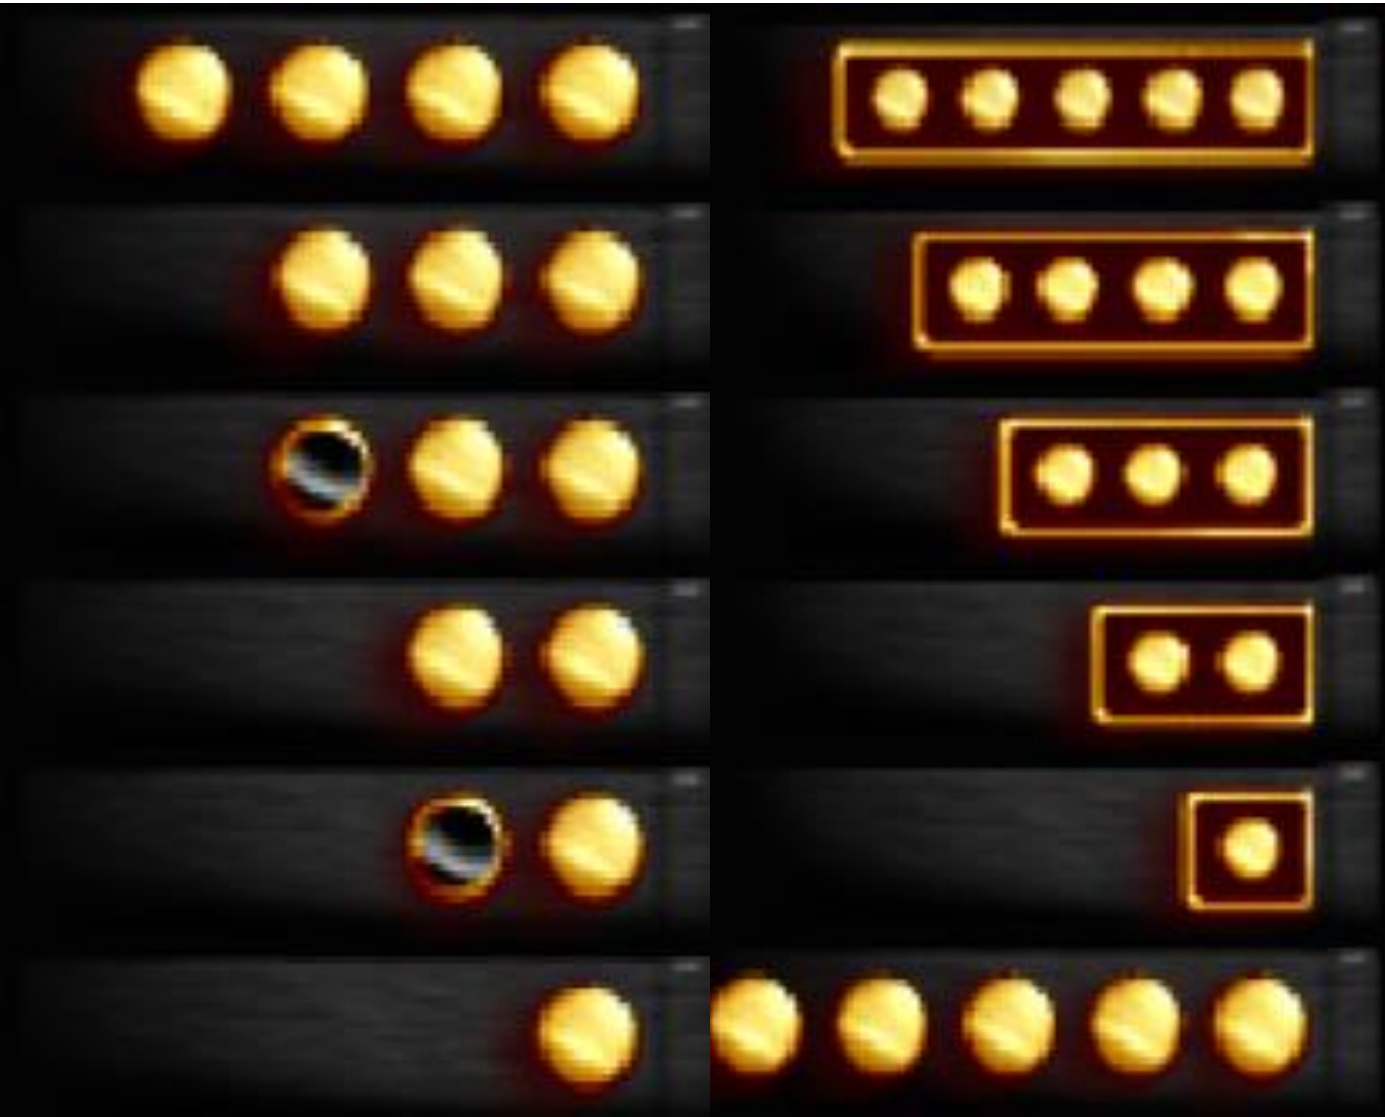

The tunic on this uniform is separate from the trousers. The front of the tunic had a zipper closure, and should be worn closed, but with the top of the zipper at varying levels, apparently subject to personal desire. The tunic was worn with a zip-front turtleneck undershirt in the division color, upon the collar of which the rank insignia was worn. The tunic is black, with padded shoulders. On the cuffs of the sleeves, a band in the division color is worn.

Please note: the SFMC has a version of this uniform, as does M.A.C.O.. See the appropriate manuals for more details.

Instead of the normal insignia worn on the left chest, a Terran Empire symbol – a vertical sword, point down, driven through the Earth -- is worn on the right chest.

Decorations– On the left chest, a dizzying array of pins are worn, presumably representing various and sundry awards and decorations. (These appear to have been notions, buttons, brooches, and other assorted baubles unearthed by the costumers on the show.) Exercise restraint – a person of lower rank and status will have fewer, and smaller, (or none!) decorations than one of higher rank and status.

Sash– Over the waist, a gold sash is worn, “pirate-style.” The captain wears his tied on the right side; others on the left. Attached to the sash is the Knife.

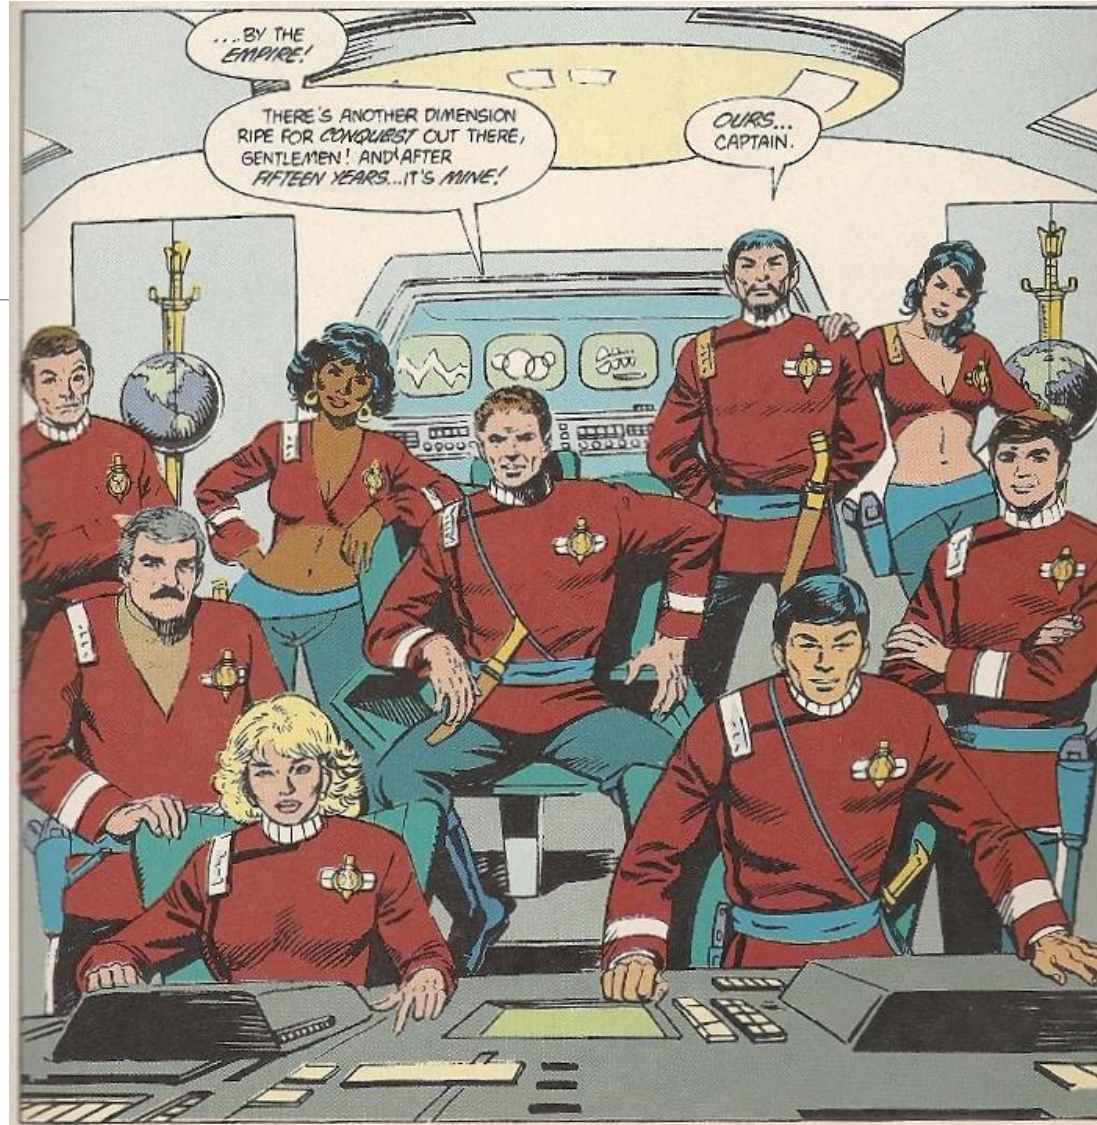

Knife– All members of the crew carried a standard-issue knife.
